

ABSTRACT

Described is a system and method for transmitting data on a power transmission line that transmits power in the form of time-varying voltage and current. Data is transmitted by using electromagnetic pulses to modulate the electric field, which is present around the power transmission line as a result of the time-varying current.

90058790.doc